

I see quite a few creators or intellectuals going out of life and looking back at his oeuvre, he feels found to be easy, two minutes after his death even his biographers forget. Somewhere I understand the frustrations of such. They have made the wrong choice and are now facing the consequences. Everyone lives their own life, but more importantly, as philosophers have said, everyone dies their own death.

György Soros is probably struggling with the same thing. Roughly at the end of his life, the commonplace that money doesn't make him happy, he can't take it with him in his teeth to the far shore. The family is financially secure for generations, so one question remains: what will happen to György Soros if he doesn't?

Writing is untalented, his system of thought confused and inconsistent. He's smart enough to see: he's not a genius. This can be your biggest pain.

György Soros carves his own statue in the gate of his own death. He has a sense of mission. Mission: György Soros, the new messiah. But there is a lack of transcendence behind it. The god of György Soros is György Soros, who descended among us in the image of György Soros.

He pushes the puppets on a worldwide chessboard. And because the secret to his financial success is that he played unfairly, he is constantly changing the rules of the game to his liking in the world savior. He is the referee, the referee, the striker, and he counts the goals as well.

We have seen this in world history. He who was given enough money and power became a dictator, and he who was not was a servant of the dictator — and without exception, he wanted to climb all the mounds to the throne of eternity.

The situation is that the road to Soros' throne now leads through us. György Soros' gas chamber in Europe: toxic gas flows from the capsule of a multicultural open society, which is deadly to the European way of life, and we, the nations of Europe, are doomed to try to fight for the last sip of air by climbing on each other.

The Liberals now want to exclude Poles and Hungarians from the political community of which we still have rights as members. We are the new Jews. Whether it is called an open society, or the rule of law, or solidarity, verbal crooks all serve as tools of disenfranchisement. When they question the will and ability of the Hungarian electorate to choose how they want to live, who they want to see in power, they are actually told that we have a big nose, we stink and we are lice.

They are considered inferior "beings." Believe me, this is practically what they think of the whole of Central and Eastern Europe, of every nation in Europe.

The otherwise classic superior colonial behavior is headed by a misty utopia. Because the situation is no better in the West, the liberals also have their own struggle: the faintest cult of otherness aims at not being yourself. They will cross anyone who they cannot carve into a multicultural person. Sounds better than Übermensch, but essentially the same.

George Soros is the liberal Führer. And his liberal army deifies in a more servile way than Hitler's own.

They learned nothing in the XX. century.
